And if head coach Warren Gatland's side are going to improve on the success of those two, then a number of players will need to step up this autumn. Here's a selection of the stars who need to make the most of their opportunity to stake a claim for a spot in the squad for this summer's European Championship in France: Scott Andrews Few have made such an impact in the professional game in such a short time. While his playing time at Bath was limited last term due to ankle and back problems, the 24-year-old Bath centre was still a member of the squad for the first time. "As a Wales player, you want to play with the national team as much as you can, and I am really looking forward to it," he said. "Of course the World Cup last year was great in its own right, but you want to build on that. “It’s not a bad place to start with the summer tour to France.” Eligible for Wales through his mother, he played for the under 21s on their European Championship tour to Georgia in May. “I was really chuffed,” he added. “To be part of the squad was a great reward for me and my family.” Rhys Webb The 20-year-old flanker is one of the most exciting talents in Welsh rugby and has made his mark with Scarlets in the Pro12 competition. Q: How to fix my jQuery animation? I can't seem to get the same fade animation with jQuery that I used to with the MozTransform plugin and I don't know why. Please take a look at this example and tell me what is wrong with it: (The fade effect started out fine, but then it started to speed up when the other two lights turn on. I am not sure why.) Thanks for any help in advance. A: You have made the second animation (fade) replace the previous. You need to change your code to make the fade animation effect the whole block so it doesn't fade out of sight before the next block comes into view.

$("#block1").fadeOut(500, function () {
  $("#block1").removeClass("animating");
  $("#block2").fadeIn(100); });
$("#block2").fadeOut(500, function () {
  $("#block2").removeClass("animating");
  $("#block3").fadeIn(100); });
$("#block3").fadeOut(500, function () {
  $("#block3").removeClass("animating");
  $("#block4").fadeIn(100); });
$("#block4").fadeOut(500, function () {
  $("#block4").removeClass("animating");
  $("#block5").fadeIn(100); });
$("#block5").fadeOut(500, function () {
  $("#block5").removeClass("animating");
  $("#block1").fadeIn(100); });

Hopefully this helps. Q: what's the difference between weight and mass of each electron in hydrogen atom? I am wondering that, from my understanding, the mass of each electron in hydrogen atom is 0.5 amu(atomic mass unit) by 2. So that its mass divided by 2, the mass of each electron is 0.25 amu. However, I just learnt that the mass of an electron in the hydrogen atom is one-eighth of the mass of the hydrogen atom. How can the mass of the electron be proportional to the mass of
